New Reviews of Old Books

Domestic Manners of the Americans, by Mrs. Anthony Trollope. London, Whittaker, Teacher and Company, 1832.

UPON reading this book shortly after publication an eminent American said "certainly the lady is well named; a Trollope she is". The lady cut into our social, religious, moral and political habits with a very sharp knife. But she stayed in the USA for quite a while and, with her French artist friend Herview, started the first US Department store at Cincinnati, Ohio, naming it Trollope's Bazaar. At this late day there are indeed few antiques collectors who have time for the kind of fun one gets from a reading of Mrs. Trollope's text. With all her caustic wit, she displays a deep fear and amazement. She is dumbfounded that an American hotelkeeper or steamboat captain could act, swear, and drink like a Duke and that our fishwives and slaveys could swear like a Duchess. She cannot understand campmeetings, slavery and a lot of other things but she did write a most engaging journal and above all, she had it illustrated with the following really excellent scenes:

Interior of Millinery Store
New Orleans Steamboat
Settlement of Nashoba, Tenn.
Solemnity of Justice
Cincinnati Ballroom
Indiana Campmeeting, 1829
Member of ongress
Antique Statuary Gallery
The Toilet
The President of the U.S. (Jackson)
Incline Plane, Morris Canal
Black & White Beaux
Ancient & Modern Republics
Wood Cutters Cabin on Mississippi
Methodist Preacher, Baltimore
Owen-Camp Debate
Miss Clarissa & Mr. Smith
Sad Weather
Live stock, Virginia, 1830
Evening at a Boarding House
Walking in the Snow
Box at the Theatre
Returning from Market
Ex Pede Herculem

These prints are lithographs, measuring 5 x 7½" page size. They are black and white but can be colored by experts; a legitimate device if one wants colored prints. Make no mistake; they are American prints and worth having. That's why either the two-volume early English editions of Mrs. Trollope, or the early American edition in one volume is a good buy at up to $10. You get all the prints and have the text for free!

CHRISTMAS TREE ORNAMENTS & TOYS

An Editorial Round-up

THE name "Santa Claus" was introduced to America by the early Dutch settlers on Manhattan Island. They spelled it "San Niklaus." While there are no early records of the use of a Christmas tree in early Dutch Christmas legends, we do know they used Christmas toys and goodies to celebrate the coming of Old Saint Nick, who was supposed to reward all good children with toys, gifts and goodies.

In ancient England, from the days of John Wycliffe, the first reformer, a peculiar candlestick was used at Christmas time called the candle trow. This candle trow was an upright rod with X-shaped crosspieces of graduated size, from bottom to top, formed in the shape of a tree. Candles were placed along the arms and burned in honor of the Lord Jesus on his birthday. Soon it became customary to place sweetmeats, goodies, dolls and gifts around the base of the candle trow. There is more than a legend to the effect that the great Bohemian reformer, John Huss, a follower of Wycliffe, introduced the Christmas tree or trow idea as a part of the reformer's Christmas celebration rites. And that would seem to be the quick-fact history of the Christmas tree. They used the actual trees in Bohemia, Germany, Sweden and the Netherlands. They used an artificial tree, in the form of a candle trow, in England, Scotland and Wales.

But that is the smallest part of this story. Christmas sweets, toys and comfits, cornucopias, and other little remembrances were part of the Christmas celebration long before trees became a standard form of decoration in the home.

Since the Pilgrims and Puritans viewed Christmas celebration with distaste, especially in the 17th century, New England has very little early Christmas history. But New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Maryland and Virginia did celebrate Christmas in the old-time manner, and consequently we find sugar bakers preparing comfits and marchpanes for Christmas use. When the Christmas tree was adopted generally, it was the comfit, the sugar plum, the marchpane and the cornucopia that were hung on the tree. Just when some resourceful observer noticed that the fragile balls blown by glassmakers as window decorations would look well on a Christmas tree cannot be stated with complete assurance. But it is fairly evident that these so-called "witch balls," blown by supertitious glassblowers, were the first Christmas tree balls. The earliest advertisement of Christmas tree balls thus far found is by Demuth of New York, who was a specialty glass-blower from the 1850's.

While glass Christmas tree ornaments are interesting, they are as nothing compared to the edible ornaments that, at one time, draped every tree, along with bright candles and strings or chains of colored paper. On the cover of this Christmas number of Spinning Wheel is reproduced a pair of marchpane Christmas cakes, honoring King William and Queen Mary. The cover reproduces them just half the size of the originals. These marchpane molds certainly were made no later than 1690. At the Phillipse Manor Restoration, Tarrytown, New York, there is a Christmas Marchpane mold dated 1563.

At one time almost every American colonial and federal home of any importance had at least a pair of marchpane molds. Every sugar baker had from twelve to fifty, all different. In these molds of carved wood they pressed the confection known as marchpane, or sweet almond paste. These cakes were then slow-baked at low temperature, heightened with vegetable colors, and either hung on Christmas trees or arranged around the festive Christmas board.

Marchpane molds, now avidly collected by knowing antiquarians, are a most fascinating memorial of early days and ways. Animals, birds, flowers, fruits, lovely ladies, babies, little children, kings and queens, lords and dukes, are all depicted on marchpane molds. The cakes made from these molds show the design in high relief. Contrary to general belief, quite a number of the early cakes themselves have survived the years. A few of the originals, one dated 1823, are here pictured, together with other Christmas tree ornaments. The Henry Francis du-Pont Collection at Winterthur, Delaware, has at least a half dozen original marchpane Christmas cakes, beautifully framed, as a wall decoration. — VETTE WATSON.

IN the early days, children accompanied their parents on expeditions to cut their own Christmas trees, after having helped in the making of the ornaments that would be on that tree at Christmas time. The home-made ornaments used on Christmas trees in our now almost forgotten past, were balls of popcorn, chains of popcorn, chains of peanuts, strings of red haws, strings of crabapples, gingerbread men, women and horses, bright pieces of hard candy in strings, and little wax tapers.

Perhaps the most awesome of the Christmas tree decorations were the "boughten" ornaments of glass or wax or plaster. These were on sale in the shops from at least the 1840's. If, however, we are to believe certain of the Stiegel glass legends, this famous glassmaker produced the deep, colored glass cups, now called Christmas lights, to be hung on Christmas trees to hold a small burning taper.

How many of us remember when it was almost customary to keep the Christmas tree standing for several months—at least until Ash Wednesday or the beginning of the Lenten season?

Not only the Christmas tree decorations, but the delightful miniature gifts to please the hearts of boys and girls, are now collected by those who do not have them, and cherished no end by those lucky enough to have fallen heir to them. In my

Did You Buy A First Edition Of the Primer of American Antiques from The Spinning Wheel?

If you did, it will be marked "First Edition" on the back of the title page. If you have a first edition, you need an errata slip to make it complete. We have fallen heir to slightly more than a 100 of the original errata slips, made for inclusion in the first edition, and referring to the error in Section 21 on Fancy Chairs and in the Glossary to Cleopatra's Barge. The error was corrected in the second edition, which was also published in 1944. To anyone owning a copy of the first edition we will be glad to send an original errata slip if you will make your request include a self-addressed, stamped envelope for reply.

collection there is an angel on a tinsel square, and a grinning Baby Bunting dressed in rabbit skin and gauntlets, dating from around 1900. There is a cornucopia-skirted Columbia, or Goddess of Liberty, holding a flag with twenty-five stars, and a very lovely lady of the 1880's.

Also pictured is a tiny, white china tea set. The teapot and the creamer are one inch tall. The little Staffordshire vase is two inches tall, and the pitcher three inches. The turkey is either carved or cast, and measures two and a half inches from head to fanned out tail. These are the property of Mrs. Charles Royer.

The pressed glass tea set was a gift to a little girl in 1904. These are between two and three inches high, the butter dish just three inches wide. The knife and fork, with painted handles, are four inches long.—RUTH GIST PICKENS.

Early American Blown Glass
1. STIEGEL TYPE

L. G. Van Nostrand

THE study of our early American blown glass is fascinating because of the opportunity it offers for historical research. In this, and following articles, we will endeavor to set forth a general plan for the study and classification of early American blown glass. This will be a condensed plan designed to give the student opportunity for more pleasure in augmenting the information by further study and research.

For the purpose of this study we shall classify our early blown glass in the following types:

1. Stiegel Type
2. Three Section Mold Blown Glass
3. South Jersey Type
4. Mid-Western Type

The glass made by John Frederick Amelung at New Bremen, a few miles from Fredericktown, Maryland, deserves mention because, after a few years of manufacturing, Amelung offered his plant for sale in 1795. During the period of operation he made many beautiful pieces of glass, particularly those which employed fine engraving as a means of decoration. Without doubt he made glass of Stiegel type and perhaps many examples which we classify as Stiegel were made by Amelung. However, this should make no difference to the collector as to the desirability or the value, since it is the type which is important.

As far as we know, Stiegel produced the first really fine glassware made in America. He did not create a distinctly new glass, but he did produce glass of fine quality at a time when quality glass, except as imports, was non-existent in the American colonies. There were glass houses operating earlier than that of Stiegel and they, too, could have produced fine glassware, but as there are no authentic examples existing, we eliminate them in this text.

Stiegel's workmen were European trained men from England and the Continent. They made the same type of glass and the same articles that they made in their native countries. This fact makes it practically impossible to state with any certainty whether or not the article was made in Bristol, Sweden, Switzerland or at Manheim. There are several pieces of glass in our collection which, in my opinion, were made in the Stiegel manufactory, but I cannot substantiate this opinion. I have never seen a piece of authentic Stiegel glass, although much must exist. But to prove a piece of glass genuine Stiegel is an impossible undertaking.

The scope of these articles, starting with Stiegel, will extend through to the first half of the nineteenth century. Early blown glass of this period was made in New England, New Jersey, New York, Maryland, Pennsylvania, Ohio and some other localities. The principal colors emloyed were clear, aqua (color of window glass), various shades of blue, several shades of green, amethyst, and amber, running from light to dark olive amber, and some other colors. Some very interesting items of glass have been found in the vicinity of our early bottle manufactories. These consisted of bowls, pitchers, pans and other articles of free blown technique. The colors were aqua, amber, olive amber and, occasionally, blue and green. These items are rich in American history and offer the student ample opportunity for personal research. They would grace any collection and are quite high in price.

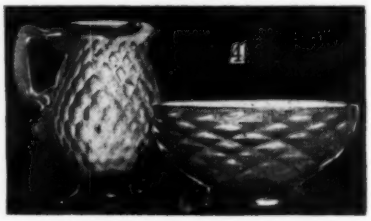
It has been said that the rarer the color the rarer the glass. This does not signify that green is rarer than blue or that blue is rarer than amethyst. If a glass manufactory has been making a certain item in green glass, then manufacturers the same article in clear glass and of a limited quantity, then the clear would be the rare color and the value would be correspondingly higher.

How do we determine whether or not a piece of glass has been blown? Generally speaking, the answer would be by the rough pontil scar found on the base. However, this sign is not infallible. Certain items in pressed glass may bear this scar due to the fact that something external may have been applied, thus making the use of the pontil rod a necessity. As this text is specifically dedicated to our early American blown glass nothing will be written about our later Victorian blown glass. Some of this glass is very attractive and as valuable as its degree of rarity warrants. There are many collectible items found in Victorian glass. There is no doubt in my mind that some of our South Jersey type of glass is no older than that of the early Victorian. However, if it is true to type, it is collectible and of high value.

In discussing the various types of early American blown glass we now start with Stiegel. Stiegel made many articles of glass, some very beautiful and a great many quite common. According to his inventory he made cream pitchers (jugs), sugar bowls with and without covers, perfume bottles, decanters, tumblers of various size, wine glasses, beer glasses, Christmas tree lights, salts, and many other articles.

The common articles were made in clear glass. Salts, creamers and sugar bowls were usually made in shades of dark blue called either sapphire or cobalt. Occasionally a salt or cream jug would be found in emerald green. This would be the rare color and the value would be high.

Stiegel used various forms of decoration including etched, enameled, cut and gilded, various forms of the diamond motif formed by blowing the glass in a mold. The enameled ware it particularly attractive. This type was generally applied to tumblers and mugs, although these items were also made with the etched type of decoration, and others with no decoration. The colors employed in the enameling process were vivid and applied with old world skill. Castles, birds and flowers formed many of the designs.



Checking Stiegel's inventory we find that he made many ordinary wine glasses and these are believed to be typical of the early American blown wines that one occasionally finds in our antique shops. I am firmly convinced that in collecting these early blown wine glasses that one has a great chance of having a genuine piece of Stiegel glass in his collection.

In the illustration I have endeavored to show glass which would definitely be classified as Stiegel type. The large flip glass in the center (Picture #1) is 8½" high with a top diameter of 6¾". Diameter at the bottom is 4½". The decoration is strictly orthodox, showing the adaptation of the basket and tulip with other embellishment of design thought to have been used by Stiegel at Manheim. This flip might be one of the large tumblers referred to by Stiegel in his inventory. The small flip at the left is panelled and bears no other decoration. The flip at the right is also panelled but bears the additional decoration of an etched border. Both of these flip glasses could be classified as Stiegel type, but not in the definite manner of the large flip in the center. However we can't prove that any of the above ware were made at Manheim. Adaptations of the basket and tulip design are also found on beer mugs and spirits bottles.

In illustration #2, we show the same large flip as shown in illustration #1, along with a similar flip, but with a different type of etched decoration. The glass at the right and smaller flips of similar design have been designated as Stiegel type. I have very serious doubts as to the authenticity of this statement. I have seen other specimens of glass with similar design which have been definitely placed as of Pittsburgh manufacture. I think that this flip was made in the Pittsburgh area from 1835 to 1840. Even if not of Stiegel type, it is a fine specimen of early blown glass and should be a welcome addition to any collection.

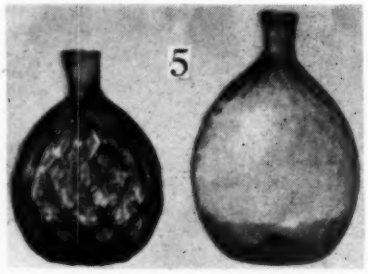
A great many pieces of Stiegel type glass have the appearance of being slightly off balance. This is particularly true of the cream jugs. On comparing the two large flips shown in illustration #2, we find that the flip glass on the right has the greater diameter of base which give it a more stable appearance.

Shown in illustration #3 is a group of typical Stiegel type glass. These items are from the collection of the late William T. H. Howe of Cincinnati, Ohio. The entire collection of Mr. Howe was catalogued and sold by the Parke-Bernet Galleries, New York City. The illustration was photographed from their catalog.

Top Row. #1 is a blown salt of sapphire blue. #2 is a vertical ribbed pitcher of sapphire blue. #3 is a sapphire blue blown salt with ogee bowl.

Bottom Row. #1 is a sapphire blue creamer with expanded ogivals and has crimping under the handle. #2 is a rare sugar bowl with cover of expanded ogivals. The foot is small in diameter, which gives the traditional Stiegel appearance of being top heavy. The color is of a brilliant sapphire blue.



#3 is a Stiegel type creamer in cobalt blue and blown in the diamond latticed pattern. This creamer also has the appearance of being off balance and top heavy.

To give the reader a general idea of price, the sugar bowl and cover brought $250.00 and the diamond latticed creamer brought $110.00. These items were sold in 1941; the prices would be much higher today. There is very little of this type of glass on the market. Only when some important collection is being sold can the collector hope to find it in some profusion. Practically all of the rare Stiegel type of glass is in private collections and important museums.

Illustration #4 shows a creamer and bowl of Stiegel type. Both items were from the splendid collection of Mrs. Frederick S. Fish. This illustration was photographed from a Parke-Bernet Galleries catalog.

The creamer is quite small in size, only three and a quarter inches high. The decoration is of the blown diamond motif. The handle is beautiful and unique in design and application. The color is of a very brilliant emerald green. This creamer sold for $1550.00.

The bowl on the right is of small expanded diamonds and the body rests on a small circular foot. Height of the bowl is 1 7/8" and the diameter is 4". The color is of emerald green. The bowl brought $850.00 at the sale.

Illustration #5 shows two amethyst perfume bottles of Stiegel type. These bottles were in the Howe collection, also sold at the Parke-Bernet Galleries. The illustration is photographed from their catalogue. The bottle on the left is 4½" high and employs a pattern of expanded ogivals. The color is brilliant amethyst. The bottle brought $400 at the sale. The bottle at the right is 5¾" high and the decoration is of small expanded ogivals. The glass is brilliant and the color is amethyst. This bottle sold for $340. These chestnut shaped bottles must not be confused with bottles of similar shape which were blown at a later date in the Pittsburgh-Ohio area. For comparison, the Pittsburgh-Ohio bottles will be described and illustrated in a later article.

Illustration #6 shows a vase of Amelung type. It has been classified as of Amelung manufacture due to the fact that practically the same engraving has been found on authentic Amelung glass. A duplicate of this vase, having a small chip on the rim, sold at the Parke-Bernet Galleries for $80. It was probably made in the Pittsburg area in the first quarter of the nineteenth century.

The enameled beaker in Illustration #6 is considered a Stiegel type, on good authority. Stiegel's papers include records of at least four expert glass enamelers and decorators. This example is from the collection of Katherine Woodward, Middleburgh, Va., and is rightly considered an outstanding piece of early American glass.

Three Section Mold Blown Glass, the South Jersey Type, and the Mid-Western Type of Blown Glass will be discussed in subsequent articles.

Telsex Company Becomes An Antiques Collector

By Annie Hoge Lockett

YOU know the old story about a dog biting a man not being news, but the story of a man biting a dog making the front pages In these days when we are apt to think of corporations as soulless entities, it is refreshing to hear of a company actually indulging in antiques collecting, and making it pay.

Russell Parrish, owner of the Telsex Company of Springfield, Ohio, has a national service organization for poultry raisers in determining the sex of day-old baby chicks. Eleven years ago Mr. Parrish wanted a display that was different for the United States meeting of the World's Poultry Congress. He collected effigies of barnyard poultry—bronze, brass, pewter, tin, majolica, redware, faience, porcelain, jade—anything.

In assembling the collection as it exists today, here pictured in part, Mr. Parrish has visited antiques shops all over America. In a way, this now famous antiques collection points to the history of our common backyard bird, known as the chicken. This is the oldest of domesticated fowl, a native of India, where it ran wild in the jungles. It was introduced into China about 1400 B. C.

The oldest effigy of a chicken in Mr. Parrish's collection is of terra cotta, of the pre-Han period between 450 and 400 B. C. When, in the 14th century, the Japanese potter, Toshiro, visited China to learn the secrets of modeling and of porcelain-making, China was producing excellent porcelain effigies of chickens. After 1520, the Japanese really began producing their famous Satsuma, characterized by a hard body and a soft glaze. One of the chickens in the Telsex Collection is a Satsuma ware hen.

Majolica, of course, is a European imitation of Chinese porcelain. Early figures of chickens from Italy, France and Austria are in the Telsex Collection. The prize piece of the collection is a great cock, three feet tall, with the early Meissen cross swords mark. This piece is solid ware, not hollow, and is inordinately heavy.

Above: Approximately one-third of the magnificent collection of poultry figurines now in the Telsex Collection. These are a feature of Poultry Congresses and conventions, and known far and wide to the poultry interests. However, this is the first time they have been brought to the attention of antiques collectors in general. The prize piece is the magnificent early Meissen cock with cross swords mark. This piece is solid, not hollow, porcelain.

ANTIQUE PRESERVE JARS . . .

They offer a hitherto neglected opportunity For Purposeful Collecting...and new Pleasure!

By Carl W. Drepperd

IF any of your ancestors visited an apothecary's shop 'way back in the 1760's, they could have purchased olives, anchovies, brandied fruits and a lot of other luxury items "preserved" in what you would call a very handsome jar. The jar might be Delft, stoneware, faience, majolica, or Cantonese ware, or even glass. So, if you have been thinking that preserve jars began with Mason, Ball, and Millville, you'd better do a right-about-face very quickly. These patented jars are the johnny-come-latelies of the preserve jar parade. Most of them will never come out of the kitchen, attic, cellar, or wherever they are now hiding. But the others—the earlier ones—pose another story. A sort of rags to riches story. They have come out of the kitchen and now live in the parlor, or should. And they will, when we who constitute the grand army of collectors focus our eyes upon them and realize what a fine opportunity for purposeful collecting our old preserve jars offer.

A few years ago an old Hudson River Valley house yielded a dozen glass preserve jars which were sold as junk. Instead of frittering them away, the junkman took them to a second-hand dealer who offered them to his customers at a dollar each. Today you'd be lucky to find such jars priced at ten dollars. These jars had pewter sealing rings anchored to a series of depressions around the rim of the glass top. A pewter screw top engaged a threading on the pewter rim. On the top, in tiny letters, is the legend: "Bouchage Labat Jeune Brevete S.G.D.G. Bordeaux. A Dufour & Cie. Seuls Cessionaires Pour La Prune." Present owners of these prune jars are torn between two desires. They want to remove the pewter rims and tops and so convert the preserve jar into a vase that looks like a Clichy or Baccarat example (which they probably are), and they want to retain the complete ensemble as a package of the Louis Philippe period. What they do doesn't matter, really. The owners are lucky to have the jars. And they are big fellows, of a gallon capacity.

Among the pictorial demonstration of preserve jars that accompanies this essay are examples of stoneware, redware, Delftware, glass, et cetera. The captions applying to each tell the short story of that jar. But the story of preserve jars in all their variety is something else again. Research thus far conducted would seem to indicate that any glass jar with a series of tooled-in dashes around the rim, and without welt, overlap, or other finish, was blown for use as a preserve jar to be fitted with a tight metal band carrying a thread on which was screwed a metallic cover having a shallow rim. Any glass or ceramic jar or pot having a rim with lip extending beyond a corresponding depression under it was designed for use as a preserve jar. The tops of these were either wet parchment or animal bladder, stretched over and down, and then tied with a stout cord. Sometimes cloth was similarly used. Additional sealing was achieved by pouring melted lead, shellac (sealing wax), bees-wax, or melted resin over the top, or dipping the entire top and sealed side in a vessel of the melted compound. One 19th century home preserving method was to tie the jar top over with cotton or Canton flannel and dip the top in melted resin.

We see many small stoneware, ironstone and porcelain pots with straight sides, but embellished with a deep groove immediately under the top. These, when small, can be assumed to be apothecaries' ointment pots which, when packed by the vendor, were tied and sealed with paper, parchment or cloth and stout cord. Various other techniques of sealing were advocated and used. There is a glass jar, patented 1859, with two cast iron disks, one inside the lip and one outside, held together with a screw and tightened with a thumbnut. This jar used an India rubber washer but still must have been the very devil to use. The small disk inside the jar had to be kept on top of of the contents or removed by jiggling until the exact diameter through which it would pass was found. Once this spot was known, the inner disk could be taken out and replaced. Another type of jar, globular or globose in shape, with extending round neck, was sealed with a grooved pottery slab engaging the neck rim. To hold this disk in place an elaborate wrought iron spring clip was used, fitted in ears on the jar. We can still buy certain cheeses packed in pots sealed in the same way!

One of the most beautiful jars, originally made in considerable quantities, was Torrey's "Egyptian" fruit jar. The term Egyptian perhaps referred, subtly, to the foolproof enbalming methods perfected by the people of the Nile. This jar, with outflaring lip over an ovo-globular body, has two square holes in the flared rim. Inside the rim can be seen the ridge upon which the cover was seated, the cover being of the same pottery. The hold-fast was a sliver of wood or a metal clip, slipped through the holes, keeping the lid on very tight indeed. But hermetic sealing was achieved by pouring melted beeswax, resin or some other substance all around the joint. This jar is made of redware, with a lustrous black glaze. The maker's insignia and patent date, "Torrey's Egyptian Fruit Jar, Patented March 13th, 1866", is far from objectionable on this jar. It is fired on in red over the black glaze, and quite definitely dates the piece. On occasion, you will find glassware preserve jars marked with the packer's name impressed on a prunt of glass. This is a highly desirable feature. We know of one that sold recently for $35, and was a bargain at that price. There was another method of marking glass preserve jars—the name of the vendor, packer, or maker was blown on the bottom of the vessel, which was shaped in a forming mold by a process similar to that uused in blowing our famous historic glass flasks.

We have no desire to repeat details of early home canning processes or data on the packing, by individuals and companies, of ginger, fruits, olives, oils, pickles, oysters, and other delicacies. These several luxuries were on sale in the Colonies and our Federal Union, and hundreds of thousands of units were sold. The packing industry is a very old one. If we have failed to note its early existence it is perhaps because it is screened by what we think is that modern invention, the tin can. Actually, the tin can, factory sealed, is the culmination of the parade, growing out of the tinsmith's desire to compete with potters and glassmakers in the manufacture of containers for home use in the preservation of foods. The early tin preserve jars had friction tops exactly like tops on paint cans today! By early, we mean the 1850s. The tin can is at least a century old in our country. It is probably much older in China where lead and pure tin containers where used for packing tea and ginger.

The Canton ginger jar, of which perhaps thousands have been converted into lamps, was a commercial preserve jar. All of these jars have a rim of unglazed porcelain showing around the opening. Each jar had a lid, and each jar was sealed with hot lead along that unglazed line. The naked porcelain provided the bonding surface upon which the lead could "take hold" and make a perfect seal. Do you remember when you could buy a Canton ginger jar for a dollar? And can you guess why the price was low? Over at least a century we imported a tremendous tonnage of ginger in these pots. Most people saved the jars. Some of our clipper ships returned from China loaded to the gunwales with this product of the Celestial Kingdom. From the 1820s preserve pots of cream colored Leeds ware were offered in capacities ranging from 1/3 pint to 1/2 gallon. These had tie-on "rims".

CUSTOM MADE LAMP SHADES

Stoneware and redware preserving crocks with tie-over tops. When used for preserves not requiring hermetic sealing, such jars were covered with a circular wooden disk.

If preserve jars are plentiful now . . . and they are . . . it is because nearly every home in America, at least up to 1900, had anywhere from a hundred to five hundred of them stored for use. Every one of our potteries, large or small, made them. Every glasshouse, except the exclusive window glass factories, produced them. The variety was so great in terms of sizes, kinds and uses, that a list of them would be a sort of combined catalog of all the potters and glassmakers, plus all our own commercial packers. Max Ams, a firm still in business, used the most delightful stoneware firkins with embossed fruits in colors, as containers for preserves, conserves and jams. The potters of Bennington made preserve jars, the potters of Shenandoah Valley, the potters of Grand Rapids and of Dubuque.

As we collect these jars for use in our parlors, dining rooms and living rooms, we need not forget they came from the kitchen and pantry, the attic or cellar. They are Cinderellas, but not "rags-to-riches" brats. Whether we use them for cigarette ashes, flowers, pussy willows, or boughs of trees and shrubs, we can remember they once held fruits rich and rare, delicacies for the tables of our up-and-coming ancestors. To those with the collecting instinct already developed, this will be all the fillip needed to start a new collecting venture. You could do much worse to your purse by picking on something other than preserve jars as objects to collect. Here is one antique that can still be had. This word to the wise may be sufficient —get them while the getting is good.

Trinket and Patch Boxes

A Delightful Collecting Pursuit, and Delightful as Gifts

By Susan Key Russon

WHEN one has collected close to a hundred and fifty patch and trinket boxes, several things can be assumed. One logical assumption is that the collector is definitely in pursuit of such objects. Next, it must follow, that so many delightful little porcelains are milestones in collateral education.

The whole thing started a few years ago with the purchase of a single trinket box, the cover of which was a figurine of a little boy in a red cap sitting in a meadow. The interest which this single purchase aroused in me seemed to open my eyes to a fact I had not been aware of before—I began noticing these little boxes in one antiques shop after another. I discovered there was a certain amount of literature devoted to these little boxes. "Staffordshire Figures" by Herbert Read is an invaluable guide.

But to think in terms only of Staffordshire, or even of the great English porcelain makers such as Chelsea, Derby, Bow, Worcester and others as the sole source of these boxes is a great error. They were made in Denmark, the Netherlands, Germany, Austria, Switzerland and France. Some of them were made to sell as the cheapest kind of trinkets, and others were so meticulously modeled that the purchase price, when made, was considerably more than a trifle.

In this field one can find so wide a variety of subjects that specialized collecting is a possibility. The animal kingdom, the birds, the flowers. Babies. Children. Adults. Pursuits. Trades and professions. Genre scenes. Boscages. National emblems. Locomotives. Steamboats. There are late ones that have early automobile models perched on the tops. There are, reputedly, examples showing balloons. Some of these boxes have tiny little mirror frames fitted with mirrors. A very cunning one, not yet in my collection, shows a proud mother and father with a new pair of twins in a cradle, the lettering in gold is "More Than We Expected."

The vast majority of these boxes for patches and trinkets are quite small, averaging four inches long, two inches high and two inches wide. Others, of course, are notably larger. I house my collection in four antique French cabinets, the curving glasses of which provide an excellent display opportunity. Among the unusually amusing boxes in my collection is one in the form of a commode with wash bowl, pitcher and soap box in front of the little mirror and a china chamber pot on a shelf beneath the wash bowl.

I am firmly convinced that thousands of different styles of these boxes were made during the 19th century, from around 1820 to 1880, and perhaps even later. Research indicates that many of America's wholesale houses of the 1880's imported patch and trinket boxes in tremendous quantities and that many of them sold at retail for from ten cents to twenty-five cents each. Even though the art of making them has not been lost, it is doubtful if even the easy to find ones could be made today as new products and sold at much less than the antiques price now prevailing. The rarer and finer examples will, of course, always bring fair to medium high prices.

There are a number of collectors in Hollywood who are finding, in these trinket boxes, an excellent outlet for their collecting instincts. And after all, one can collect a good many patch and trinket boxes and keep the entire collection in very little space.

Jane finds a brass candlestick with original d'outer. The d'outer is a brass cone. It doesn't snuff the candle—which means trimming the wick—it extinguishes it.

The price tag reads, "Flute Cut Tobacco Jar." The expression on the film star's face reads "quizzical."

FINE POINTS of FURNITURE

Early American

By ALBERT SACK. Foreword by ISRAEL SACK

Introduction by John M. Graham II, Curator, Colonial Williamsburg

• One of America's premier authorities has written a new kind of handbook for the collector and connoisseur. In pictures and text, here is a thorough analysis of design, decoration, craftsmanship, construction, and finish . . . how to detect restorations, fakes, and repairs; why similar pieces by the same maker, and of the same age and scarcity, may vary in value; how to select the best pieces from over 100 different types of early American furniture. 320 pages, $4.00 error. He may under-sell certain items. On occasion, he may overprice. But when a dealer underprices an object, does he ever dream of going after the customer who purchased it and ask for an additional sum?

Antiques dealer Robertson explains silver gilt enameled spoons to antiques collector Jane Wyman.

Jane Wyman finds a two-fold pleasure in her antiques shopping. That was obvious. She gets sheer joy from just browsing around and in the shops. She gets tremendous pleasure out of planning purchases that will bring pleasure to her friends and acquaintances.

"I even buy antiques for friends who are not collectors," she confided. "In almost every case it starts the receiver on a new pursuit—they become antiques collectors. I am passing on to them the delightful experience that happened to me. I didn't know anything about antiques but one time a friend gave me a gift that was a 17th century clock. When that clock started ticking, it started me antiques collecting, and I've been at it ever since."

As we moved from shop to shop I heard from this film star some of the best antiques collecting sales arguments I've ever heard. Said Jane, "Now anyone, without any yen whatsoever for antiques, would be pleased with a usable piece of fine old silver or an old porcelain candy jar." Her lovely brown eyes lighted up as she smiled. I suspect she had someone in mind. But she continued, "I don't only do this at Christmas, I do it all the year round, for showers, birthdays, wedding anniversaries, and any other affair that calls for a gift. I always select antiques."

My tour with Jane Wyman was a delightful experience. You see I, too, am a lover of antiques, but my lovely hostess, on this expedition, was collecting antiques at an almost wholesale rate. She wrote out checks with what she laughingly confessed was careless abandon, and said she knew she would have to economize on clothes to balance her budget. Then she wondered if I thought she was selfish when she decided to keep some of the beautiful things she had bought. She had a very clever rationalization all her own. "If I keep some of these things, I'll have to make the replacements more valuable to appease my conscience!"

Jane Wyman has an inborn sense of justice. Her father, R. D. Fulks, has served, respectively, as County Collector, Chief of Detectives, and Mayor of St. Joseph, Missouri. Jane, born January 4, 1914 in St. Joseph, Missouri, was named Sarah Jane Fulks. Her Mother was Emma Reise, born in Saarbrucken, Germany, who came to the United States as a child. Jane's early schooling was in St. Joseph. In addition to grade school training, she had dancing, ballet and singing. She came to Hollywood with her mother when she was eight years old and stayed a few months. In 1929 Jane was back in Hollywood attending Los Angeles High.

Having no opportunity to break into motion pictures, she returned to Missouri and enrolled at the University in 1933. One night she attended a party and did some singing. A member of the group suggested she try radio. The next thing she knew she was a professional radio artist and, by 1934, was singing for radio stations from New Orleans to Chicago, and from the Mississippi to the Rocky Mountains. She took the radio name of Jane Durrell.

She is looking at glass, but she has her mind made up about that Louis XV repousse silver teapot.

With radio success in her bag, Jane again decided to try the film studios. Enrolling in a Hollywood dramatic school, she was told she just wasn't right for motion pictures. The dramatic coach said, "Your face doesn't go with your voice." Jane swallowed her disappointment and continued as a dancer. In 1936, the

Thimbles As Collectors' Items

By Claire T. McClellan

THE thimble is a collector's item that seems to be gaining in popularity for several well-deserved reasons. Though not so well publicized, for example, as mechanical banks or shaving mugs, thimbles are as interesting and collectible as anything made by man. Dating from antiquity, thimbles of bronze have been found in old Roman ruins both on the European continent and in Great Britain. Old British and Celtic words for thimbles indicate these articles were in use long before the Norman Conquest, and many examples of thimbles have come down from the Middle Ages. So if the antique or really ancient has appeal, thimbles may be had of great age—although these early ones are somewhat difficult to secure!

In the 19th century, when domesticity was the order of the day, every little girl, and big one, too, was expected to sew a fine seam. Thimbles, in those days, were a favorite gift, and thimbles and cases were made in infinite variety of design and material. It is these 19th century thimbles that collectors of old ones most frequently encounter, as so many have survived as family heirlooms and keepsakes. Silver, gold, ivory, fine china, cloisonne, wood, guttapercha, brass, iron, bone and pewter are some of the materials found fashioned into old thimbles. The cases for them are often as interesting as their contents—tiny silver filigree ones to dangle from a chatelaine, carved wood and bone in the shape of fruit or nut or animal, little finger-shaped cases that contain needles, pins and thread as well as a thimble—right on up to the elaborately fitted-out workboxes that must have cost dear papa quite a sum when he bought them for mama or Susie!

Another reason for the popularity of thimbles as a collector's item is the small space that a thimble collection demands. With old dolls or pitchers or cups and saucers, for instance, additional space soon becomes imperative, but thimbles by the thousand can be accommodated in the top of a secretary bookcase. An old spool cabinet makes an ideal container and takes up but little space, and the mirrored back of an old shadow box sets off a thimble collection with scintillating sparkle.

Though the antique gold thimble of some well-known personality of history will command a substantial price when it reaches the auction rooms, most thimbles are modestly priced—another thing to commend them to collectors. Solid silver thimbles can be bought quite cheaply, as a rule, and the rarer materials seldom cost more than a few dollars.

Modern thimbles are often elaborate or ingenious. Then there are the advertising thimbles—which are a field in themselves. Patented thimbles are another interesting sideline—those equipped with thread cutters, needle threaders, embroidery punches, and the like. They may be found both among the modern and the older pieces. Many very fine silver, china, and gold thimbles are being made today, and these will be the treasures of the future.

Though there are thimble collectors everywhere, there seems to be a special concentration of them on the West Coast, particularly in the state of Washington. There are several active thimble collectors clubs there. Given two or three unusual thimbles, nearly anyone with the collector's spirit will want to start a collection of them at once. And a lot of people already have.

What Is It?

Who Made the Big, but Light Weight Statues of St. Nick carrying a Christmas Tree?

How big? How light? Of what is the figure made? There are some light pottery figures of Father Christmas and there are some plaster ware figures of Santa Claus, some being almost 2 feet tall. In the 1870s, Butler Brothers, wholesale merchants, produced a showwindow Santa Claus, here pictured. This figure, with tree, stood 21 inches high. It was made of papier mache and the tree could be trimmed with small glass balls, etcetera. This may be what you have reference to. Incidentally we hear these figures, in spite of late production are scarce and are much sought after as Christmas decorative units for the home. The price, when first offered, was $1.95 each, packed for shipment. It is believed the sole customers were retail stores which purchased them for display purposes.

Chromos of Yellowstone Are Said To Be Scarce. Are These Currier & Ives, and What Are They Worth?

They are not Currier & Ives. Chromo-lithographs, after original watercolors by Thomas Moran, were made at Boston, 1876, as one of the superior Centennial Year publications. V. F. Hayden did the text. The series was issued in a large portfolia, folio size. We have seen the set offered recently at $225. We cannot attempt to give specific valuations in this feature —appraisal is within the province of those specialists who make a business of it.

Did They Make Staffordshire Figurines of Jenny Lind?

Indeed they did. But not always can we tell who "they", the potters were. Barnums biggest hit, the Swedish Nightingale, was effigied in half a dozen or more statuettes in full color, some of them showing the singer with the head and bill of a bird. The New York Historical Society has a sizable collection of Jenny Lind Material including figurines. It is asserted that not only Staffordshire potters but German, Swedish and Danish potters issued figurines. We picture one of the most popular figurines of this singer who literally swept the mid 19th century off its feet with her voice.

Did they ever make a life-size Majolica Eagle in the USA?

Mr. Thurston Thacher of Hyde Park, N. Y. sends us pictorial proof that the Phoenixville Majolica Potteries did make a huge eagle although if life size it is still a little eagle as eagles go. Some commentators contend this imposing piece of beautifully modeled majolica was made as a pedestal for holding a pot of shrubbery or flowers. Others claim it was made as a church ambo; the eagle on which the scriptures rested for reading by the minister. Certainly large eagles have been used as lecterns for some fifteen centuries. Research on the production of this eagle has only started. Front and back views are shown, both by courtesy of Mr. and Mrs. Thacher.

Snuffer Trays of Pressed Glass, Were They Made, and Where?

None of the experts in the field of pressed glass seems to have noticed snuffer trays or commented upon their making. It is doubtful if any American pressed glass house made these trays. But they were made, probably by Baccarat, by Pellat, and some other English pressed glass producers. Also, it may well be that Stouvenal of New York made them. They do exist, although they are scarce items.

Can You Tell Why Certain Churches Prohibited Missionaries in China Buying and Sending Antiques Home?

This is a long, involved story, varying with the experience of each of the churches. But the gist of the matter may be summed up as follows: Many church boards discovered that ministers and doctors were making unholy profits from acting as importers' agents and as scouts for porcelain, pottery, jade, crystal and other Chinese antiquities. Some of the missionaries went further; they had surviving old potteries make traditional wares with hand-painted decor of American scenes. This "historic" ware might have been produced any time from the mid-19th century down to the early 1930s. Produced in the traditional manner, decorated meticulously by hand with the ever quaint and delightful Chinese manner of copying American art, these missionary wares have an unique status. In themselves they are not fakes, but 19th and 20th century production of old, old potteries. They were never sold as old beyond their time and period, yet they were sold at fantastic prices in relation to the cost of production. We may suspect that it is this excess profit from extra curricular activity on the part of medical and other missionaries that caused the boards of missions of various churches to ban commercial activities by representatives in China. They did not, however, bar the purchase of antiques for gift purposes or for the missionaries' own home furnishing. Upon their return from the Orient, some missionaries shipped a big houseful of furniture and appurtenances of value home to the United States.

What are "Sliced Animals"?

These were the jig-saw puzzles of the 1870s; mounted pictures of all the animals in the zoo, cut apart for reassembly by youngsters as educational pastime. Selchow & Company of New York made them. They are today a logical part of the toy parade and complete examples in original lithograph labeled boxes are much esteemed.

What is Burslem Ware?

Burslem is a place, near Newcastle-under-Lyme, where great deposits of excellent potters clays caused many potteries to develop. Therefore the term "Burslem" is subjective, or general, and any ware, by any potter or pottery made there is Burslem ware. Among the many wares made at Burslem the following can be mentioned here: Thomas Wedgwood, John & Robert Adams, Aaron Wedgwood, Moses Shaw, H. Mayer, J. Stevenson, Moses Copeland, John Adams, Enoch Wood & Sons. Everything from Cradles to gravestones were made at Burslem. A complete list of the Burslem potters from 1686 to 1866 would be too lengthy for this notice. Students can refer to Ceramic Art of Great Britain" by L. Jewitt, published 1878 for extensive data.

What Is A Solon Vase?

In the world of collecting, a Solon vase is a Minton vase decorated by Marc Solon, formerly of Sévres, in a technique known as pate-sur-pate. This process involved laying on of liquid clay and building up the design. M. Solon worked during the mid-nineteenth century and was commented upon enthusiastically by Llewellynn Jewitt in the 1870s. He worked at Minton's from 1870 until 1904. That Solon also painted in colors may be gathered from the fact that at the Morgan sale in 1886 vases by him sold for as high as $8000.

What is Chelsea China?

It is a form of porcelain made in the district of London known as Chelsea where, according to accepted authority, Dwight the potter succeeded in discovering the secret of Chinese porcelain and then abandoned its manufacture, continuing to make stoneware, a close relative of porcelain. Others continued the experimenting and by 1745 has a very good ware on the market. The works were supported by George II and the production rivaled that of Sevres. The Duke of Cumberland was a patron. A silversmith (name not known) was the chief manager. The works employed 100 people and a "nursery" of 30 apprentices in 1752. In 1754 they advertised snuff boxes, smelling bottles, trinkets for watches (probably little cases to hold watches on a table or stand) knife handles, porcelain toys (statues and figurines) and services of plates, tureens, sauce boats, et cetera. In 1757 Mr. Sprement was "ill and retarded production" so he may have been the silversmith-promoter and manager. In 1769 Spremont, or Sprement, sold his interests and property inclubing molds, kilns, and finished wares. Josiah Wedgwood commented on this sale saying to Bentley, a fellow potter "there is an immense amount of fine things" certain of which Wedgwood wanted to buy. William Duesbury, proprietor of the Derby china works purchased the Chelsea works, 1770. [Turn the page]

What is a "Government Measure" and does it look like a milk-pail?

In some respects a true "government measure" does look like a milk pail and some of them may have been used for milk. The best description of this container is "a pair of truncated cones, joined at bases, fitted with a high fixed bail handle, hand hold, and collared pouring spout". These are usually of copper but if used for milk would probably be of tin, or tinned. The capacity of a government measure of the type here pictured was 5 gallons. Smaller ones were of different shape. The name derives from the official or guaranteed legal capacity for measurement of liquids. Half gills, gills, pints, quarts and 1, 2, 3, 4 and 5 gallon measures were made and sold generally up to 1900.

What Is laHaye Glass?

It isn't laHaye, it is Heye glass. It was made in Germany at two factories, with warehouses at Bremen and Hamburg. Hermann Heye was an extensive exporter of wine and cordial bottles, perfumes, and glass specialty containers.

Is There a Lindbergh Plate? And What Is It Worth?

This division of the editorial department of Spinning Wheel does not evaluate antiques or make appraisals.

There is a Lindbergh plate, commemorating the lone-star flight to Paris from New York. This plate is French porcelain, bearing the marks "A (impressed), Zc in red and brown, and DV, also "Sanegueimnes"* and "FRANCE", and a credit line "phot. "Manuel, Fr." The face of the plate carries the portrait of the flyer and this legend: "New York, May 20th, 1927, Paris, 21 Mai. Charles A. Lindbergh", with sprigs of laurel.

*"SARREGUEMINES"?

Is there a "Nelson Column" Bitters Bottle

Frankly, we do not know for sure if the bottle here pictured in answer to your query is a miniature, or supposed to be a miniature of the Nelson Column. But it was made and sold as the "Column" from the 1870s. It is a bottle of full quart capacity and of clear glass, well molded. The example pictured is from the catalog of the distributor, not the maker. It was considered a "show bottle" for use in drug or liquor stores, on soda fountains or bars.

Is there such a thing as a Glass Barrel?

Yes. Glass barrels similar to those made of faience, majolica, Delft, porcelain and pewter, were made in the 19th century. They were used both as show containers for wines and other beverages and as dispensers in shops and in homes. The example pictured is probably Bristol glass. The stand is japanned iron, the faucet is Sheffield plate. Capacity is 2½ gallons. Such glass barrels were at times used in homes as containers for sherry and port wines.

What Are McKinley Cut Glass Bowls?

This query must be rephased to read, "What Is The McKinley Cut Glass Bowl?"

Actually, only one bowl was made. A seventy-five pound punch bowl of rich cut glass, made by the Libbey Glass Company, and presented to President McKinley for use at the White House. A picture of the bowl, supplied by the Libby Company, shows that it was cut in a series of U. S. shields and stars and stripes. Who owns the bowl now or whether it has survived the years, we have been unable to discover. But to the best of our knowledge the Libbey Company produced but one of these master bowls of gigantic size. The glass was blown in two pieces, cut separately, and then assembled, the bowl proper and the stand proper being individual units.

What is a Speakers Windsor?

This, and several other terms have been invented for the huge windsor chairs reputed to have been used in the State House (Independence Hall) Philadelphia during the sessions of the Continental Congress. The seats are 23" high, the fan backs extend approximately 5 feet 3 inches above the floor line. These chairs require a footstool for comfort of the occupant. One pair is known to exist. These have the necessary accompanying stools. We do not know if the legend or tradition that these chairs were used in the State House has been authenticated. The chairs are of maple. One example is pictured.

What Is A Wine, Whiskey or Brandy Skeleton?

By this term in the wine and liquor business is meant (or was at one time) a case and its complement of bottles, empty of liquid content. Any dealer, in the pre-prohibition days of wholesale liquor dealers and local rectifiers, could buy "skeletons" of a wide variety of "brands' and fill them with his own blending approximately the basic original. It is no longer betrayal of a trade secret to reveal that at least twenty "brands" of French brandy, the cases properly branded, a caseful of labeled bottles, branded corks and seals, could be purchased by any dealer and filled by him with his own make of brandy. Scotch and Irish Whiskey, 25 brands of whiskey (American), and innumerable wines were available in skeletons. The bottles were imported from France, Belgium, the Netherlands, Sweden, Germany and Italy.

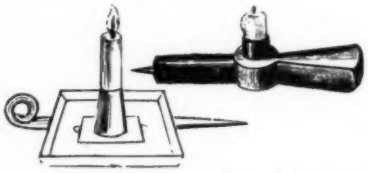
What Is A Bottle Mask?

A wire mask, very much like a fencing mask, used by professional bottlers, especially of beer, soda water and carbonated beverages, in the early days of the industry as a guard against injury from bottles breaking under pressure.

Were Queen Anne Chairs Ever Japanned and Gilded?

Many of them. The origin of the style is Chinese and the first chairs of the style made in Europe (by the Dutch who originally imported the Chinese prototype) were laquered in green, red, black and even violet(!) and then gilded in the Chinese taste, with Chinese scenes and genre subjects. We call these chairs Queen Anne but they appeared on the scene by 1680 and were used in the William & Mary period. The turned leg furniture of William & Mary was not popular in Queen Anne's reign but the cabriole legged furniture was and this, eventually, became the Georgian style and finally Chippendale. Some of the early chairs even had mother of pearl inlay. An example is pictured.

Please explain candleholders with awl-like bayonets on them. What were they used for?



Pictured are several such candlesticks; there were many other styles. They were made for use in cellars, the spike or bayonet could be plunged into the side of a supporting post, a barrel stave or even between chinks in stones and bricks. This left the cellar explorer with both hands free. It should be noted these candlesticks, while frequently used in households, were primarily designed for use in wine cellars.

How Old Is Plasterware?

If yours is a subjective question which could be rephrased as "What is the earliest record of plaster images or ware?" it can be stated without question that effigies, busts and ornaments of plaster were sold, and perhaps made, in the colonies from at least the 1740s. "Two small and ordinary plaster-of-Paris effigies" is an item listed in the inventory of a Philadelphia gentleman who died in 1766. Most of the crude cottage ornaments now posing as "chalkware" (see Spinning Wheel, October, 1950), if genuine, are of mid-19th century production, dating at best from c. 1820 to 1860. These ornaments, of course, were cast from other and better models, and then crudely colored. To date any piece of this plaster ware is actually to appraise it, because the dating establishes whether or not it is genuinely old, or original, or a late fake.

Christmas Tree Ornaments and Toys

The Connecticut Toy & Novelty Manufacturing Company issued this broadside in 1899. I like to think that the gentleman on horseback, upper right, is none other than our great Theodore Roosevelt, hero of San Juan Hill. This poster is all about toy soldiers which, the manufacturer said, could take the place of the toy soldiers imported from Germany, and sold at exorbitant prices. He offered toy soldiers at 75 cents per 100 plain and $1.25 per 100 colored. He offered big toy soldiers at $1.25 and $1.75 per 100, plain and colored, and soldiers on horseback at $2.00 and $2.50 per 100, plain and colored.

The little advertisement of patent cornucopias is undated but appears to be about 1890. These folding containers for Christmas candies to be hung on Christmas trees, were designed by Louis Prang & Company of Boston, and produced by Cornell & Shelton of Birmingham, Conn. Perhaps the biggest group of customers were the various Sunday Schools throughout the country, which purchased millions of these every year to hang on the big church tree, and which were passed out to all good little boys and girls as Christmas gifts.—LAWRENCE B. ROMAINE.

The Christmas Gift That Lasts a Year!

It is the "Spinning Wheel", of course. Twelve big issues to anyone you designate, $2. Gift card if you like.

Place your shop before the eyes of the year round travelers. The 'Antique Buy-Ways' of THE SPINNING WHEEL is their guide to you. $8.00 for 12 months listing (no less than 12 months accepted). Your name, street or route numbers, and ten additional words of your own choice describing your merchandise. No change of copy allowed, except address.

BOOK REVIEWS

Young Father Time, by Burrows Mussey. The Newcomen Society of North America, Princeton University Press, 1950. $2.75

THIS is the story of Eli Terry, clockmaking genius of Connecticut, father of mass production in clock making, and accepted producer of one of the most sought after clocks in the entire collecting scene, the Pillar and Scroll mantel clock. This book is, we presume, the first of a series of quick fact essays on men, ideas and programs which, in the hands of courageous yet simple people made our Nation great, and a bonanza for all and sundry. Eli Terry did more than invent clock movements and make them in quantities. He paved the way for that seemingly impossible thing, the increase in workers' pay and the reduction in the retail price of the goods. He used no hokus pocus and balderdash; he had no social planning bug in his head. He had simple justice. He raised the clock business from a small shop operation and a somewhat precarious livelihood for most, into a splendid paying, long term job opportunity. And he did it without Federal aid, or Federal inter ference. Now his masterpiece, a beautiful mantel clock sold complete for $15 is one of our classic antiques with auction records ranging from $200 to $500 and more. This is not a book for the scatterbrained or the hit-or-miss collector. It is a book for thinking people who not only collect but who want the right to collect to remain intact. May there be a hundred more books like it by Newcomen and may they all touch upon the fact that any American industrial history is foreordained also to be a history, at least in part, of antiques now collected by some, or by many of us.

Jane Wyman Shops for Antiques

most casual film test made at Warner's revealed her inherent acting ability. A contract followed immediately. Jane has been with that studio ever since. She has made twenty-five pictures and won the Academy Award in 1948 for her fine performance in "Johnny Belinda," receiving the silver Oscar. Her latest picture, "The Glass Menagerie," presents Jane at her superlative best.

Jane Wyman's hobby, (you guessed it) is antiques collecting. But she has other hobbies. She paints, and she has two charming children, Maureen Elizabeth, born 1941, and Michael Edward, born 1945. Jane's Beverly Glen home is filled with choice antiques, with special emphasis on old English silver, ceramics and glass. Devoted to her children, she divides her time between studio and home . . . when she isn't out antiques collecting.

About Antiques Collecting

Or the recollections of Auntie Anne Teague . . .

SOME men take naturally to antiques. Others have to be converted. "Don't bring any of that danged old stuff into my house," Lew Henderson would roar. "I had enough of that when I was a boy." Bess never said much, but every time she'd save up an extra dollar or two, she'd slip in and buy some little piece he'd never notice—an old blue sugar bowl for flowers—a fancy dish for jam. Finally she worked up to a Gone-with-the Wind lamp. When he started to fuss, she told him her Aunt Mary had had one just like it, and she felt duty bound to keep it in the living room.

And then she set her heart on a pine chest. Of course, Lew said "No." But Bess just announced in her quiet way that it wouldn't cost him a cent. She'd save the money out of the food budget. After a couple weeks of salt pork, fried potatoes and dandelion greens, Lew gave in. "Don't know what you want of that old thing," he grumbled, "but let's have some decent meals around here." He hollered again when he found it would cost twenty-two dollars to refinish it.

"I'll do it myself," he grumbled. Do it he did—and a beautiful job, too. Everyone who came to the house admired it. "Where did you find it?" "Who refinished it?" "You clever Lew—and you lucky Bess."

Lew got so puffed up with pride that of his own accord he suggested a second chest for the hall. Then came a pine table for the breakfast nook. The other day Bess was standing at the kitchen sink, washing vegetables, when she heard Lew talking to their next door neighbor. "You know, feller," he was spouting, "if we had to sell everything in our house today, there are just three pieces we could get our money back on—those two bureaus and that pine table. When you come right down to it, antiques are an investment."

Bess never let on she heard. She just dropped her paring knife right in the sink, took off her apron, and walked down to the shop to put a deposit on a maple corner cupboard!

Hayes Haviland White House China Painted by Theodore R. Davis

Spinning Wheel is indeed fortunate to have a communication from Mary C. Whitlock of Washington, D. C., making a correction in the article on Haviland china, by Mr. John Ramsay in the September, 1950 issue. This exquisite production was decorated by Theodore R. Davis, not "David". Subscribers who keep their files of Spinning Wheel will do well to make the correction.

Julia Russell Davis Parmelee, Frankfort, Michigan, a daughter of Mr. Davis, gives us the following important information in respect of the artist. "Theodore Russell Davis was the son of David Ambrose Davis of New Hampshire, and was born in Boston in 1841. He was a staff artist for Harper's Weekly during the Civil War, and shortly thereafter moved to New Jersey, where he lived at Asbury Park. He designed both the shapes and the decoration of the Haviland set for the White House. The decoration was taken from American flora and fauna."

CHURN LAMP TABLE

This attractive lamp table can easily be made by adding a circular plywood top to an old churn and an adjustable arm lamp of the modern variety to the top. It may be painted and decorated to harmonize with the room in which it is to be used. The one illustrated is done in a natural finish with painted ivy sprays on the table top and around the bottom of the lampshade.
